AUDIO CONFERENCE: “Improving Controls Can Improve Program Performance” on the role that internal controls play in improving agency performance. Establishing and maintaining effective internal controls are key factors for managing risk while improving operational efficiency and effectiveness. Many government agencies are making progress on improving controls, but are hampered by limited resources and the proliferation of requirements. This audio conference focuses on how some agencies are meeting this challenge. Participants will gain insight into the methodologies, solutions and tools available to enable agencies to more effectively and efficiently assess entity-wide risks, evaluate internal controls, improve processes, comply with government requirements, and achieve agency program goals and business objectives.

To share their expert knowledge and practical experience in internal controls are Kathy Hill, Director, Risk Management and Compliance, Federal Emergency Management Agency, and Rory Souther, Chief Officer of Resource Management, U.S. Coast Guard.
